Dairymen feeling the Pinch of the New Central Valley Water Discharge Requirements

Many Signing Up with Western United Environmental Services for Support

Modesto, CA – As the new Central Valley Water Discharge Requirements (WDRs) start getting serious, dairymen in the area are turning to a familiar name for support. Western United Environmental Services (WUES) was founded by Western United Dairymen for the express purpose of helping dairy producers comply with the complicated new requirements at the lowest possible cost.

“We are getting lots of calls and visits from producers who aren’t sure what they need to be doing. WUES is set up to give dairy producers as much or as little help as they want. Anything from just submitting required reports or pulling samples to doing all monitoring, sampling and reporting,” states WUES Office Manager Heather Kenney.

To ensure all aspects of the regulations are covered, and costs remain as low as possible, WUES has partnered with two engineering firms and four labs. “These partnerships guarantee the Central Valley dairymen can qualify for a substantial discount of the cost of complying with these new regulations,” explains Michael Marsh, CEO of Western United Dairymen.

WUES has five Environmental Technicians on staff with plans to hire more as needed to ensure Central Valley dairymen have the level of support they need. To learn more about the Central Valley WDRs or to sign up please call (209) 238-3818 or visit www.wuenvironmental.com.
